FOOD REPORT: Not having the pizza for a long time, I decided to see if it returned back to the original accolades of previous years. It came close. The size was larger, about 4" by 6" square. The cheese and pepperoni were plentiful and the dough was crisp and fresh. The only drawback was the hot lights heating element to keep the pizza warm. It really does not do the trick and makes the pizza greasy. If the Arena would only make the pizza the way they used to, in the Pizza Hut conveyor belt manner, will it reach its original luster. At the souvenir stand, new items for sale were an uninspiring $16 Bulldog T-shirt and a four photo color of the Ultimate Warrior of the same pose done psychedelic style that didn't catch my fancy. However, the $8 Big Bossman sunglasses looked to be of decent quality and would certainly be a prized item for someone not needing prescription eyewear. Before entering the Arena, there were several signs declaring Ultimate Warrior was injured and that Randy Savage would be replacing him. Also, the ring announcer stated Mr. Perfect and Shawn Michaels were injured and that anyone wishing a refund could do so prior to the completion of the first match. Titan showed its class and honesty again. The Irresistible One joined us and started the ball rolling with this joke: "What's the difference between a superior whitewall and 350 used condoms?" ANSWER:- The former is a Good Year and the latter is a Great Year!! Ha! Get it? Now, promoted by Titan Sports, onto the matches:

- (1) TEXAS TORNADO pinned THE BARBARIAN at 9:11 with a schoolboy. * (C) * The One started briskly with: "Hey Braindead! I wish I had a slave driver father like Fritz!" At 3:27 a good test of strength ensued and the fans got into it shouting "Kerry! Kerry!" It almost made me feel like I was in the Sportatorium as the Arena's air-conditioning system was not really functioning well in the sultry 92° heat. Really, for ½ a foot, Kerry looked quite quick and nimble scurrying around to get a hold on the Barbarian.
- (2) BRITISH BULLDOG beat TYPHOON by QOT at 9:20. * (C-) * Typhoon was a sub for ailing Mr. Perfect. Bulldog grabbed the mike and asked Typhoon "What's it like being a traitor?" and the fans caught on quickly with "Traitor!" chants. Typhoon became angered and left ringside and this resulted with the One castigating Bulldog with "Hey Bulldog! You hurt his feelings". Bulldog hoisted Typhoon over his shoulders but Typhoon fell on top of him. Still, we were in awe of Bulldog's feat. Both were brawling outside the ring when Typhoon missed on a clothesline and rammed his arm into the ringpost to enable Bulldog to beat the count for the victory.
- (3) COLONEL MUSTAFA with GENERAL ADNAN pinned KOKO B. VARE at 13:11. * (D) * Horrible match. The highlight was Mustafa's Pearl Harbor job while Koko was depositing Frankie at the corner. After the quick recovery by Koko, they didn't lock up again until 6:18. Koko reversed a suplex at 12:12 and went on a tear until he missed on a charge into the turnbuckles that enabled Mustafa to feebly cover him for the pin.

(4) MOUNTIE & NASTY BOYS with JIMMY HART beat THE LEGION OF DOOM & BIG BOSSMAN in a Six-Man at 14:12. MOUNTIE pinned BOSSMAN. * (B) * Knobbs ripped up a fan's L.O.D. poster and threw it on Hawk and mass mayhem developed and the heels fled to the dressing room. Bossman caught the leapfrogging Mountie and slammed him hard to the mat at 3:33. Fans went bonkers. Mountie then got pressed by Hawk who heaved him onto both Nasties at 8:37. Animal got the tripleteam shortly afterwards until Bossman got the hot tag at 13:24 and the match broke down. During the melee, Mountie grabbed the cattleprod to zap and whack Bossman on the noggin for the pin. Good show.

(5) SERGEANT SLAUGHTER with GENERAL ADNAN beat HACKSAW JIM DUGGAN by DO at 15:33. * (C-) * The One grabbed a newspaper, held it sideways and questioned Duggan with: "Hey Hacksaw! Is this how you read the paper?" and Duggan smiled, pressed his fingers and asked The One and his evening mate, The Educated Man: "Are you guys lovers?" to which The One and the Educated Man responded by standing up in unison and hugging each other. Besides myself, ref Earl Hebner lost it as we all cracked up. Hebner did a nice routine with Sarge that left Sarge on the mat from a hip toss by Hebner. One of the contestants bumped Hebner around 14:00 and Sarge grabbed the 2 by 4 and started hitting Hebner on the back with it. Hacksaw got the board just as Hebner revived himself to get Duggan disqualified. Hebner was the star that made the match a decent one.

(6) SHANE DOUGLAS & MARTY JANNETTY beat THE ORIENT EXPRESS at 17:48. JANNETTY pinned PAT TANAKA * (A-) * Best match of the night. Marty Jannetty gave the finest individual effort I have witnessed this year. The One got Jannetty with his "Kermit the Frog!" ditties and I zinged him with: "Maria Naso likes Shawn better than you" and "Maria says you're a dud, not a dude!". Maybe it was our remarks that got him cranking. Douglas was attempting to sprout a moustace and the One had his gem of the night with: "Shane, that's a nice moustace, get the cat to lick it clean!" Jannetty went most of the way getting doubleteamed and recovering without tagging in Douglas for long periods. Douglas slugged Tanaka at the ropes to give Jannetty a cheap schoolboy pin.

(7) RANDY "KACHO MAN" SAVAGE beat UNDERTAKER with PAUL BEARER in a body bag match at 15:40. * (B) * Undertaker was sporting a new tattoo on his right forearm and crowd gave Savage a respectable pop upon entering the ring. Undertaker almost got Savage into the bag but Savage got off an eye poke to save himself at 9:38. After a breathtaking flying clothesline by Undertaker at 10:07, a second attempt was made but the zipper seemed to have gotten snagged to give Undertaker problems. Savage caught fire and finished off Undertaker with the urn to get Undertaker stuffed into the body bag.

NOTES & STUFF: The NWF July 27 show in Johnstown featuring the Original Sheik vs Abdullah The Butcher was cancelled when the money backer decided to drop most of the nationwide tour.

Steroids Issue Outshines Matches

BY RANDY SHAFFER
Daily News City Editor

Some members of the professional wrestling scene are trying to take the current steroids scandal and turn it around in their favor.

During a week that read like a True Confessions magazine, WWF World champion Hulk Hogan denied using illegal steroids to build up his body but says he took a male hormone to treat muscle injuries.

And WWF owner Vince McMahon admitted to having used steroids that he received from Dr. George T. Zahorian III, who was convicted last month of illegally selling the body-building drugs.

"I trained 20 years, two hours a day to look like I do," said Hogan, 37, who holds the WWF title for the third time. "I am not a steroids abuser and I do not use steroids."

Hogan appeared on Tuesday's "The Arsenio Hall Show" — at his own request, according to Hall — and stayed out of his ring character for the entire interview.

Hogan said he used the hormone, which he didn't identify, as part of a physical therapy regimen that included ultrasound treatments, deep muscle massage and prescribed drugs.

"This involved basic anti-inflammatories and a synthetic male hormone which is a steroid," he said.

A torn biceps suffered during a match in 1983 forced Hogan to decide between surgery and sports therapy, which included perscription drugs. Surgery would have forced Hogan to stay out of action for several months, he said, which he could not afford to do at the time. He said he was wrestling about 300 bouts a year at that point.

At a federal trial in Harrisburg, Zahorian testified he sold steroids to several pro wrestlers, including Hogan. Zahorian was convicted of illegally selling the body-building drugs.

Hogan said he was upset by the steroids trial and the "lies in the courtroom that were taken as fact. ... It hurt me, it hurt my family. It put a dark cloud over what I believe in."

McMahon made the admission of his steroids use at a news conference Tuesday to answer allegations that the WWF is rife with steroid use.

Vince McMahon Tells All About His Past Steroids Use

"I used a steroid that I got from Dr. Zahorian very briefly about three and a half or four years ago," said McMahon, who is not a wrestler himself but does do some body building. He used the steroid only once, he said.

Zahorian said he sold steroids to various wrestlers, including WWF champion Hulk Hogan and Rowdy Roddy Piper.

"This affords us the opportunity to answer some allegations, however outlandish, and also is a day on which we can make a promise — that we will be held accountable," McMahon said.

Earlier this month, the WWF said it would begin including steroids in the weekly drug testing it has done since 1987. McMahon said the WWF would be able to announce some specifics of the plans "very, very soon."

McMahon also said he soon would no longer be overseeing the drug testing himself, and that it would be turned over to an independent company.

At the same time, McMahon said that while there have been instances of drug abuse among WWF wrestlers, it is much less prevalent than has been charged.

"People have been taking the word of individuals who are not credible, and that's irresponsible, in my opinion," McMahon said. "We never want anyone again to question whether this is good, wholesome entertainment."

"The WWF wants to stay in the headlines," Hogan said. "We look at this as a positive. We're going to be the role models for all of the other athletes. I wish the NFL would adopt Vince McMahon's drug test policy."

He also termed former WWF World champion Bruno Sammartino a hypocrite for criticizing steroids use after working with wrestlers such as Superstar Billy Graham, who admitted his abuse of steroids in the 1970s resulted in hip replacement surgery, ankle problems, liver

Last weekend's WCW Great American Bash pay-per-view turned out to be quite uneventful. Matches were dull, announcing was bland, and the pace of the show lacked excitement.

All four competitors in the scaffold match looked tentative, even Bobby Eaton, who always has been touted as an expert in this type of contest. The Robert Gibson-Richard Morton match could have contained more wrestling moves, but it ended up becoming Morton stomping on Gibson's injured right knee. Even the Lex Luger-Barry Windham World title tilt was slow.

Here's a rundown of the matches:

BY RANDY SHAFFER
Daily News City Editor

Pro wrestling is rich with symbolism. Many times a wrestler's name itself will indicate to fans the role he will play in the ring before he steps through the ropes.

Consider the case of Sid Justice, who came to the WWF this summer from WCW, where he was known as Sid Vicious and was one-fourth of the Four Horsemen.

Short clips of Justice have been played during WWF telecasts for several weeks, and the reaction from some of the promotion's other performers made it difficult to tell if Justice would be cast in the role of a good guy or bad guy.

Last week, Justice was announced as special guest referee for the three-on-two "match from hell" on the Aug. 26 SummerSlam '91 pay-per-view card. Justice made it clear during an interview on the weekend syndicated programs that he will not side with the competitors on one team that consists of Sgt. Slaughter, Col. Mustafa (aka Iron Shiek) and Gen. Adnan.

But does that mean he will throw his allegiance behind the opposition — WWF World champ Hulk Hogan and Ultimate Warrior? Or will we see a rarity in the ring wars — a special guest ref/wrestler who will act impartial?

Hogan and Warrior, who will headline next Friday's WWF card at Pittsburgh's Civic Arena in a body bag match against the Undertaker, are almost certain to show up on a live interview segment on this weekend's telecasts to promote their SummerSlam match.

Also likely to appear on the programs is Justice, who either will hint to his backing of the fan favorites or again state his intention to be an impartial arbiter for the main event at SummerSlam, which will be staged at New York's Madison Square Garden and will mark the first return of a WWF supercard to that facility since the original WrestleMania in 1985.

Eventually, Justice will be made to choose a side, whether it is at SummerSlam or later this year. If Justice was brought to the promotion by WWF czar Vince McMahon with the promise of the main event at WrestleMania VIII, it means he will turn rulebreaker to enable a Hogan-Justice match or we might see a favorite-vs.-favorite contest similar to Hogan-Warrior at 'Mania VI.

But why let the cat out of the bag now? Why not keep everyone guessing for a while? Letting Justice play it down the middle for the entire SummerSlam event and cardtopper match will increase fans' tension and speculation on which way he eventually will lean.

Next Friday's Pittsburgh main event between Warrior and Undertaker was spurred by the pair's last match at the Civic Arena, when Undertaker ended up stuffing Warrior into a body bag during a match that didn't contain a stipulation for use of the object.

But don't look for the match to have any bearing on the SummerSlam main event, such as many arena matches have been used to set up pay-per-view events. The Warrior-Undertaker feud has reached its end and next Friday's tilt will serve as its climax.

Also on the Civic Arena card is a six-man tag bout pitting Big Boss Man and Legion of Doom against the Mountie and WWF World tag team titleholders Nasty Boys. Although no such match has been announced for SummerSlam, this six-man match might point toward the long-awaited title shot for the LOD against the Nasty Boys at which time Animal and Hawk capture the title.

Another bout resulting from the last Pittsburgh card will match Intercontinental champion Curt Hennig against Davey Boy Smith. Last time the pair grappled till the 20-minute time limit expired, so this match will have a one-hour limit. But remember, this is the WWF, so there is no chance both men will be in the ring for 60 minutes. Even a 30-minute match is remote.

At SummerSlam, Hennig will oppose Bret Hart in a match that will feature the two best technical wrestlers in the federation today. Hennig also takes the best fall of any current WWF performer.

Also on the Civic Arena card: Hacksaw Jim Duggas vs. Sgt. Slaughter, Kerry Von Erich vs. Barbarian, Rockers vs. Orient Express, and Koko B. Ware vs. Col. Mustafa.

The remaining three cards this year at the Civic Arena are scheduled Sept. 20, Nov. 1 and Dec. 15. All are Friday night events.

Also announced for SummerSlam are the Bushwhackers (with Andre and Giant in their corner) against the newly formed Natural Disasters, Earthquake and Typhoon (formerly Tugboat). Another bout will pit Ted DiBiase against ex-bodyguard Virgil.

Bruno-Hulk: wrestling legends wage war of words

Bruno Sammartino
Down on steroids

By Mark Madden
Post-Gazette Sports Writer

It's a pro wrestling dream feud: Ross Township resident Bruno Sammartino vs. Hulk Hogan.

And, even though it's being fought with words, not holds, the two biggest names in the history of the World Wrestling Federation are waging a very lively battle indeed.

Ex-WWF champion Sammartino, 55, has long been outspoken concerning steroid abuse in pro wrestling. Current champ Hogan, 37, has faced the media's (and Sammartino's) wrath since it was revealed that he bought steroids from a Harrisburg physician, Dr. George T. Zahorian III.

Zahorian was convicted on eight counts of selling steroids for non-therapeutic purposes at his trial earlier this month.

At his trial, Zahorian testified that Hogan was a heavy steroid user between 1984-89. Hogan testified differently on the "Arsenio Hall" television show last week.

Hogan said that he'd only taken steroids three times, each time to heal injuries. He criticized Sammartino, calling him a "hypocrite" and accusing him of "using Superstar Billy Graham to put money in his pocket."

Former WWF champ Graham, 48, feuded with Sammartino in the 1970s. Graham has had a hip replacement and two ankle operations due to side effects from his admitted steroid abuse and now walks with the aid of a cane. He is also sterile and has been diagnosed as having liver problems.

"To say I was a hypocrite for getting paid to wrestle Billy Graham is ridiculous," Sammartino said this week. "How can he suggest I'm responsible for someone else's behavior? I'm responsible for my own."

"I'd heard Hogan was going to come clean on 'Arsenio,' admit he'd taken steroids. Instead, it was almost total denial. And he calls me a hypocrite? That jerk's been on that stuff so long ... For him to come on TV wearing a cross and just tell lie after lie — it's ridiculous."

OK, so Sammartino's no Hulkamaniac. He's no fan of the WWF, either, which he left for good in 1988 after a 3½-year stint as a television commentator.

He scoffs at announced WWF plans to institute steroid testing for its wrestlers. Besides Hogan, several other WWF wrestlers were implicated as steroid abusers at the Zahorian trial. Sammartino says "90 percent" of WWF grapplers use steroids.

"I don't believe they're going to have legitimate testing for steroids," Sammartino said. "They're saying that to please the media. No way they'll do it. They're just buying time and hoping the problem will go away."

WWF media spokesman Steve Plenamenta, after turning down a Post-Gazette request for a Hogan interview, said that the WWF steroid-testing plan was indeed legitimate.

"We want to get our [testing] program up and running as soon as possible," Plenamenta said. "We've interviewed two firms about conducting our testing. We wouldn't go through the motions of doing that if this wasn't legitimate. We want to be on the right side of the law."

Wrestling Observer Newsletter editor Dave Meltzer took Sammartino's side in the dispute.

"For Hulk Hogan to call Bruno Sammartino a hypocrite is ridiculous," Meltzer said. "Hogan's done what he accuses Bruno of doing — making money off wrestling someone that takes steroids — 50 times over."

And for Bruno to speak out against steroids is legitimate — he never took them. For Hogan to do it on 'Arsenio' is absurd for obvious reasons."

You'd be hard-pressed to find anyone in wrestling who would accuse Bruno Sammartino of taking steroids. But he admits wrestling's steroid problem hit close to home once.

"My son David denies taking steroids, but there was a period of time when I was damn sure he was taking them," Bruno said. "I felt very heartbroken, very angry that my son would do something I was so against doing."

"But looking at David now, I do believe he's off them."

David Sammartino, 30, once wrestled in the WWF as well as in the National Wrestling Alliance. He lives in Georgia now and wrestles only sparingly.

Bruno hopes the WWF is sincere about eliminating steroids. But he hopes the public is prepared for some changes if it is.

"If the WWF eliminates steroids, we'll see a wrestling organization that looks like a basketball team," Sammartino said. "What do you think those guys are going to look like off that stuff, guys like [6-foot-9] Sid Justice?"

"If they go completely clean, those guys will deflate so fast it'll shock people."

Grapplers Grab Daily Tube Slot

BY RANDY SHAFFER
Daily News City Editor

Before I leave for the matches tonight at the Civic Arena, I thought I'd take this opportunity to clean out some of the observations I've been scratching into my notebook.

During baseball season, you can watch a game on TV almost every day. During the college basketball campaign, you can view several games each day.

Both have been said to be approaching overkill proportion and oversaturation of the small screen. Many also have criticized pro wrestling for overexposing its product on television. So now there is a daily wrestling show — each weekday at 4 p.m. on ESPN, unless it is preempted by a golf tournament or another live sporting event.

The new Global Wrestling Federation, created by promoter Joe Pedicino from the remnants of the USWA, is presenting this daily, hour-long ringfest on the all-sports cable channel. So far the daily editions have featured tournaments to crown a television champion and light-heavyweight champion.

The caliber of wrestling being presented is good. The format of the show is well-organized and puts the emphasis on the grappling.

But how many fans are watching the GWF program five days a week? Sure, each show contains a neatly packaged recap of previous editions to catch up some viewers who might have missed the previous few days' shows, but I don't think a majority of the viewers will catch every show.

I can't imagine such an ambitious effort by the GWF continuing beyond the September cutoff of the current contract with ESPN. I can foresee a continuance of the GWF-ESPN agreement in the form of a weekly program.

It looks like Jimmy Snuka is on his way back to becoming a rule-breaker, particularly considering his behavior in a match on this week's "Prime Time Wrestling." The WWF has to do something to Snuka. He was getting a worse response as a good guy in recent months than many of the rulebreakers.

Here are two more matches to add to the Aug. 28 SummerSlam pay-per-view card: Irwin R. Schyster (a.k.a. Mike Rotunda) vs. Greg Valentine and Mountie Jacques Rougeau vs. Big Boss Man in a jailhouse match. What's a jailhouse match? you ask. The loser of the match "spends the night in jail." The WWF hasn't specified whether it will be a special facility constructed at Madison Square Garden or a cellblock in the Bronx.

Maybe it's just me, but I can't get too excited about the SummerSlam card. Too many fans already are aware that the "Match Made in Heaven" really will be a repeating of marriage vows between Randy Savage and Miss Elizabeth. The "Match Made in Hell" seems too much like a replay of the WrestleMania VII setup, complete with Persian Gulf War references.

WCW appears to be going through a rebuilding phase. Not only is the promotion in the process of finding new World tag team champions via a televised tournament, but the organization also will stage a round-robin tourney to determine a new U.S. champion Aug. 25 at the Omni in Atlanta.

Dick Murdoch and Dick Slater, known as the Hardliners these days, were DQ'd along with opponents Freebirds Michael Hayes and Jimmy-Jam Garvin, in the first match in the World tag title tourney, eliminating both pairs from contention.

Arn Anderson and Larry Zbyszko, now known as the Enforcers, will grapple Young Pistols Steve Armstrong and Tracy Smothers in the next tourney match tomorrow on "World Championship Wrestling" (6:05 p.m., TBS).

WCW's own Top 10 ranking might provide a clue to who will become the next U.S. champion: 1. Barry Windham, 2. Nikita Koloff, 3. Sting, 4. Ron Simmons, 5. El Gigante, 6. One Man Gang, 7. Steve Austin, 8. Johnny B. Badd, 9. Bobby Eaton, 10. Dustin Rhodes.
